According to the given manifesto, black people who are subject to being oppressed are treated with hatred by the privileged and powerful people and their lackeys; that black people deserve a high standard of living and the freedom to choose their own fate; and that the past racism and discrimination against black people by the American people should be adequately justified. Black people should have the decency to be granted fundamental human rights and should have the appropriate education to enable them to contribute significantly to the growth of American society. The racist and fascist US government should end its heinous oppression of the oppressed people, and the police should stop their long-standing discrimination and brutality against people of colour. For all the black people being imprisoned in jails and prisons who are the victims of the oppressive US military and government system to be given a fair and impartial trial. Finally, the manifesto states that black people should be treated with the same respect and dignity as everyone else, and that they should have access to the same opportunities, food, housing, education, clothing, justice, and a peaceful environment.

This manifesto is primarily concerned with oppressed black people, the racist and fascist government and its lackeys, resentful cops, and people who harbour grudges against black people.

This manifesto uses explicit language.

Ethos:

The manifesto suggests overcoming the discrimination against and uplifting the oppressed black people. The aggressive nature of the American people towards the coloured people must end, and the oppressed people should be given the same opportunity as everybody else so that they can choose their own fate. America must compensate for its racist and heinous past against black people so that black people can play their role in the development of the country and themselves.

Pathos:

The black community is portrayed in this manifesto as the oppressed people who have been deprived of their freedom for over 400 years. More than 50 million black people have been killed by Americans. The manifesto makes references to the US government's inability to give black people a healthy start in life and a high standard of living. The manifesto calls for an end to the long-standing hostility and prejudice against oppressed people and strives to grant them sufficient rights in exchange for their obligations.

Logos:

According to the manifesto, despite being promised "the 40 acres and two mule" agreement, black people have yet to receive it. Because black people have been indoctrinated from a very young age, they have always been the focus of racism and oppression. The racist and fascist US government hasn't given them what they deserve. There has always been deep-seated police brutality and hatred for black people. Therefore, the government must exert enough effort to eradicate the deeply ingrained prejudice against black people and also provide them with the opportunity to benefit themselves and the nation.

Kairo:

Black people have had enough of the ever-lasting prejudice, negligence, and loathing that they have suffered for a very long time, frustrated by the treatment of privileged and powerful people. Black people have endured enough injustice and pain. Now it's the responsibility of everybody to put things right for the oppressed people who are trapped in this discrimination.

I feel convinced of almost all the things this given manifesto has to offer except the part where it suggests that black people should bear arms. It is written in the manifesto that black people should arm themselves for self-defence. How can you talk about peace in the next line when you're talking about arming yourself for self-defence? A gun can never bring peace to anyone. If anything, the second amendment rule should be annihilated so that people can guide themselves to respect and tolerate each other. Great things take time, so people must be patient to achieve them. Also, in no way should people abide the agony that befalls them but should gain the courage to face it with a strong and peaceful mind.

I believe that "The Black Panthers' Ten-Point Program" is a very strong and mandatory manifesto for black people who have been suffering from oppression, racism, hatred, or any kind of discrimination towards them. I feel responsive to taking part in the empowerment of the oppressed people. I am enraged at all of the racist and biased people, police, and government officials in the United States who have tortured and humiliated people of colour. And I feel sorry for those who have suffered enough and are still suffering from this racist system. I feel this way because black people depict the ultimate victim in this scenario and have been suffering for a very long time. As Martin Luther King said: "Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere". We are bound together in a single garment of destiny, entangled in an unbreakable web of reciprocity. Everything that affects one directly or indirectly affects everyone else.
